

Types of Questionnaires

The most popular method of collecting information is through questionnaires. Various types of questionnaires are formed by scholars who are pursuing various forms of research. Since there is no one type of questionnaire that is ideal for all studies, so it becomes necessary to know about all the approaches for questionnaires. There can be open ended and close ended questionnaires. The former just has questions and space for answers, while the latter has some options from which respondents have to choose. Questionnaires can be structured, semi-structured or unstructured. They may start with general questions or specific ones. Questionnaires can be sent online, or distributed manually to the target population.